'The real aim of this school is not to teach thought but thoughtfulness, humanity, kindness and citizenship. That is the ideal I have always had, and happily there are parents good enough to trust me to try and put it into practice. Look out of the window a minute, will you?'

I went to the window, which looked out on a large garden and playground at the back.

'What do you see?' Miss Beam asked.

'I see some very beautiful grounds,' I said, 'and a lot of jolly children. But what surprises me, and pains me too, is that they are not at all healthy and active. As I came in I saw one poor little thing being led about because of some trouble with her eyes. And now I can see two more in the same condition, while there is a girl with a crutch just under the window watching the others at play. She seems to be a hopeless cripple.' Miss Beam laughed.

'Oh, no,' she said, 'She is not lame really; this is only her lame day. Nor are those others blind, it is only their blind day.'

The house withdrew into silence, snakes moved

Among books, I was then too young
To read, and my blood turned cold like the moon.
How often I think of going
There, to peer through blind eyes of windows or
Just listen to the frozen air,
Or in wild despair pick an armful of
Darkness to bring it here to lie
Behind my bedroom door like a brooding
Dog .....

It was a stormy night when Anna heard a knock on her cottage door. She hesitated - who would visit at this hour? Gathering her courage, she opened the door to find a pale, cloaked stranger with piercing grey eyes. "Please, help me," he whispered, collapsing onto her floor. Anna dragged him inside and tended to his wounds, which were deep and fresh, as if from a fight. "What happened?" she asked, but the man only muttered, "They're after me."

Before Anna could ask more, the sound of hoof beats thundered outside. Lanterns flickered as shadowy figures surrounded the cottage. "Hand him over!" a gruff voice commanded. Anna's heart raced. She turned to the stranger. "Who are you?"

"I cannot explain," he said, his voice firm despite his injuries. "But if you trust me, you must hide me." Against her better judgement, Anna hid him in her cellar. When the men barged in, she lied, claiming she had seen no one. They searched her home but left empty-handed.

When Anna returned to the cellar, the stranger was gone. In his place lay a single black feather and a note: "You saved more than a man tonight. The world owes you."

From that day, Anna noticed strange things - storms avoided her home, crops grew bountifully, and her village prospered. She never learned the stranger's full story, but she knew she had played a part in something far greater than herself.
